Fingal County Council launches public consultation on Register of Electors

Fingal County Council, along with the three other Dublin Local Authorities, has launched a Public Consultation on the modernisation of the Register of Electors with the introduction of Voter.ie.

The Voter.ie Project will initially only be available in the Dublin region and will allow users to check their electoral details online in real time. Users can submit requests to update their details or remove themselves from the Register. The service also allows for the online registration of first time applicants. Each local authority is responsible for maintaining their register.

Director of Corporate Affairs, IT and Human Resources for Fingal County Council, John Quinlivan said: "Voter.ie is designed to improve residents’ experience of the Register of Electors by making the process more convenient, accessible and efficient. During the transition, it is important that we engage with the public and hear their views to allow us to provide the best service for our customers."

The system allows for automatic uploads from external agencies including the General Register Office and allows for the transfer of electors between participating local authorities.

Online voter registration does not replace the current paper forms. If residents wish to avail of the Voter.ie services, they must first add their details to verify their identity through www.mygovid.ie. MyGovID is an online identity service, developed by the Department of Employment Affairs and Social Protection that allows you to access Government services in a safe and secure manner.

The Voter.ie Project is expected to be completed and available for use of Dublin residents in February/March 2019.
